

March 23, 2010

DI Team,

Over the last week we have all seen a number of articles about DynCorp International's police training and mentoring contract in Afghanistan. Most of the coverage, including this week's Newsweek cover story, fails to reflect the good work we are performing for our customer.

We can rightly be proud of the job DI is doing in Afghanistan under very difficult and challenging circumstances. Our work has been praised by senior government officials and, by every account, we have met the objectives set out for us. We can all hold our heads high.

Now that the GAO has sustained our protest, we fully expect to bid on the new contract to train the Afghan National Police. DI's past performance over the last six years is key to the recognition by the government of the tremendous value DI has brought to the mission. Your commitment and expertise make it possible for us to continue to perform this vital work.

We will actively challenge mischaracterizations of our performance in the media. We are proud of the professionalism and dedication DI brings to the mission every day, and how we differentiate ourselves in the way we stand up and deploy high-performing teams for contract execution, compliance and employee conduct.

I want you to know that I appreciate your hard work and commitment to DynCorp International and to the important missions we support for our customers. Your efforts embody DI's mission: We serve today for a safe tomorrow.

Bill Ballhaus